

A calmer way to fill cancellations

An empty chair should not mean another round of manual follow-ups.

What happens today

You and Carla search a Google Sheet, then text clients from the salon phone.

It is hard to see who has been contacted or who is still waiting. Follow-ups get missed, and openings stay empty.

What matters most to you

Keep invitations moving reliably.

Avoid promising the same opening to two people.

Reduce repeated texting.

Make the next step clear for staff and simple for clients.

The prototype follows the priorities you confirmed in our conversation.

One opening, one invitation at a time

1. Match the right clients

Service, full appointment availability and required stylist preference. Earliest waitlist entry goes first.

2. Give each client 15 minutes

A decline or timeout automatically moves the offer to the next eligible client.

3. Reserve on acceptance

The opening closes to further replies.
Expired offers cannot book it.

Staff can see the current invitation, reply status and remaining clients.

Temporal remembers the offer and deadline, so the process can resume after the background service restarts.

A simple reply, with staff in control

Clients see the service, stylist, appointment time and expiry, with two clear buttons: accept or decline.

If delivery fails

Invitations pause and staff are alerted. You or Carla choose to retry, skip that client, or stop the opening.

If plans change

Cancel the opening or mark it filled by phone. Outstanding invitations close.

Verified locally: competing replies, late replies, timeouts, staff intervention and restart recovery.

Mobile invitation

What this prototype covers, and what comes next

Working now	Simulated or excluded	A small supervised pilot
Matching and waitlist order Exclusive offers and expiry Automatic reservation in the demo Staff controls and activity history Warm desktop and phone screens	Texts are simulated; none are sent. No live Square or Google Sheets connection. Staff handle later bookings separately in Square. Login, secure links and full calendar conflict checks are future work.	Start with one stylist and a small, consenting client group. Connect real texting, secure invitation links and Square availability checks before using real bookings.

How to judge the pilot

Watch time to fill an opening, staff follow-up effort and booking conflicts. Reliability comes first; expand once the process is trusted.